WHY THIS MATTERS TO YOU NOW: As teenagers, you are consumers.

1. Students play Consumerism Family Feud to experience the consequences of time scarcity. Game rules:
   1. Time can be borrowed
      1. Team 1 borrowed: 1:1 – 30 seconds for 30 seconds
      2. Team 2 bank: 1:2 – 15 seconds for 30 seconds
      1. Team 1 is “Time Rich”. Team 2 is “Time Poor”.
      3. Game operation instructions located in the Time Scarcity Family Feud Powerpoint
   2. Explain to students that they just participated in an experiment. The goal of the experiment is for students to experience the impact time scarcity has on decision making. Introduce students to the article “No Money, No Time” and explain that the article summarizes extensive research of the effects of scarcity on decision making.
   3. Students reflect on their experiences participating in Family Feud while reading “No Money, No Time” from the New York Times. Students are to underline research findings relevant to their experience participating in Family Feud.
   4. Using the discussion guide sheets and example discussion prompts a classroom discussion is facilitated by the teacher. Example discussion prompts:
      1. In the Family Feud simulation:
         1. How did time impact your “bandwidth”, your ability to respond to questions correctly?
         2. At what point did it appear the captain’s decision making ability began to be affected by time?

   • If borrowing decisions were made, were the choices wise?

1. What kinds of real world spending decisions are influenced by a lack of time and money? (i.e. less time to comparison shop, such as when a car breaks down; less time
1. Why do people go into debt? (i.e. To wait for a better deal; sacrificing time with family and friends)

2. What kinds of real world borrowing decisions are influenced by a lack of time and money? (i.e. Coalescing and snowballing of scarcity challenges; only focused on the short term)

3. How can time be bought? (i.e. Hiring someone to mow your lawn, babysit, oil changes, guide investment decisions, grocery shopping)
